A general scheme for the gratuity to the families of servants who die either before retirement was proposed so as 1897, discussed in Council ed in 1905 as the then bers, the 2nd councillor and the Dewan were opposed to it (Vide Sda 5 of 1896-97). Some relief is however being shown in special deserving cases of deaths while in harness. But there are no definite rules regulating them. If as suggested by the 1st Member in para 20 supra some restricted kind of relief may be given by general rules, it is a matter for consideration whether as suggested by Mr N. G. Basu the late Comptroller in para 10 of his letter No 5862/Pen 450 d: 7-4-05 the Govt of India rules on the subject may not be adopted with some modifications.

Grant of gratuities to families of deceased officers are found in the file of 1896-1897 put up. There it W.th the introduction of the Life Insurance & Family Pension Schemes, it may be regarded that Govt have fully discharged their obligations to the families of officers. But there is however one particular aspect in which the pension rules as now in existence are found to be defective. It is this ~~V~~ is that though pension is said to be 'deferred pay' the amounts received by several employees of Govt are very unequal. If by putting in one month's Service a person earns ~~a title to a~~ not merely the pay given for the month but something more which is paid later on as 'pension', two persons who put in the same period of Service should be treated in the same manner as regards the 'deferred portion' also. But as this deferred portion is made to depend on the length of life of the pensioner a person who lives long enjoys a larger share of deferred remuneration while the person who dies in harness is entirely deprived of the 'deferred portion' he had earned by serving Govt. ~~Apart from the arguments advanced in favour giving some help to the families of deceased Officers, Govt~~

GPB—75,000—17-12-15

Serial No.

It therefore stands to reason that Govt Should if possible make some attempts to remove this inequality, to some extent at least. One way of doing this would be by laying down that the family of every officer who dies while in Service or soon after retirement Should receive a gratuity based on the consideration that every Officer or his family Should get the benefit of pension or deferred remuneration for a ~~first~~ ~~point~~ at least a certain period say one year. The rules would then be somewhat as follows: —

1. The family of an officer who dies while in service and who on such date wd ordinarily be entitled only to a gratuity, to be given 1/5 of the gratuity he would have got if he had retired on the day of death.

This fraction is arrived at by the following reasoning. A person with x years service gets a gratuity of x × his pay. ~~Instead of~~ If x is less than 10 but if x is more than 10 he gets a pension of $\frac{x}{60}$ × his pay and as it is proposed above to give a gratuity equal to 12 months pension his family wd get $\frac{x}{60} \times \text{pay} \times 12 = \frac{x}{5}$ of pay. Hence 1/5 of gratuity admissible under the ordinary rules.

2. The family of an officer who dies while in service and who would have got a pension if he had retired on the date of death – to get a gratuity equal to the 12 months' pension which he would have got under the ordinary rules if he had so retired.

3. The family of an officer who dies soon after retirement to get pension for 12 months minus pension actually drawn –

To reduce the extra cost which would be necessitated by the above suggestions it may be ruled that the above gratuities will be given only if the deceased leaves behind him widow, or children or parents. and the age of compulsory superannuation may be raised from 55 to 56 so that the superannuation pension paid between the ages of 55 & 56 may be saved and utilised for the extra Exp^re suggested above – The Efficiency of Service will not perhaps suffer much by the age being raised to 56 as unnecessary expense is now caused by the rule, about retiring officers not being properly observed and Efficient men being prematurely retired.
